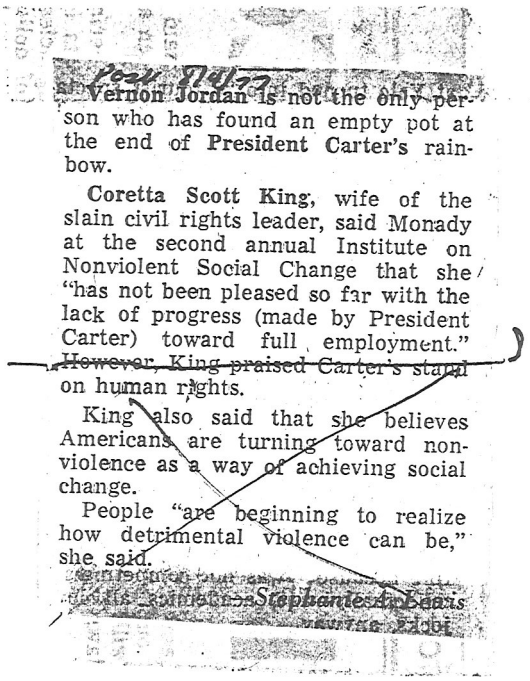
Add in Chapter 1

~~(Jordan was far from alone in this view.~~

(The Washington Post printed this short item on August 4,1977:



Post 8/4/77

Vernon Jordan is not the only person who has found an empty pot at the end of President Carter's rainbow.

Coretta Scott King, wife of the slain civil rights leader, said Monady at the second annual Institute on Nonviolent Social Change that she "has not been pleased so far with the lack of progress (made by President Carter) toward full employment." ~~However, King praised Carter's stand~~ on human rights.

King also said that she believes Americans are turning toward nonviolence as a way of achieving social change.

People "are beginning to realize how detrimental violence can be," she said.